HISTORIA

On the origin of this and other preparatory drawings for The Caprices, see the commentary on the first of them, corresponding to Caprice number 1 (Francisco de Goya y Lucientes, painter), and on the one corresponding to Caprice 3 (The bogeyman is Coming).

Line of provenance of this drawing: Javier Goya; Mariano Goya, 1854; Valentín Carderera, ca. 1861; Mariano Carderera, 1880; Prado Museum, 1886.

ANÁLISIS ARTÍSTICO

A preparatory drawing for Caprice 51. They repulse.

Matilla comments that the scene depicts three monstrous beings performing an activity that is properly human, the action of cutting each other's nails. This activity has been related to the practice of theft, and this Capricho has been interpreted as a satire against those politicians who help and protect each other, or a satire against the impious practices of the Church, and an ironic commentary on the advantages they derive from their cunning appearance.

Some details differ between the drawings and the print, such as the wings of the central demon, which are smaller and more open to give more importance to the sky in the print. The sorcerer on the right has also undergone changes, as in the drawing he wears a monk's habit with a hood and in the print he appears completely naked, as does the figure on the left.
